QUICK SHEET · CONSTITUTION OF THE FEDERATED REPUBLIC

States, Territories & Indigenous Nations

How a place rises to statehood, falls from it, or leaves entirely — Statehood requires two successful audits within the constitutional timetable, not a political admission vote; and Indigenous sovereignty is acknowledged as something that precedes the Republic, not conferred by it.

Article XV · §15.1–§15.9
Article XVI · §16.1–§16.5

TERRITORY TO STATE — FOLLOWED BY BIENNIAL AUDITS — §15.1–§15.3

§15.1
Territory
Elected local authority, Article I protections, social-state access, proportional Assembly seats (no Senate seats). May begin the Statehood pathway.

→

§15.2 · THE AUDIT
First Successful Audit
Must occur within two years after initiation. Success requires completed findings from all three Monitors with no material failure. A warning keeps the proceeding open but does not count as success. After the first success, the jurisdiction remains a Territory.

→

§15.2 · SECOND AUDIT
Full Statehood
A second successful audit must occur within two years after the first. Its publication confers Statehood immediately by constitutional operation. Two Senate seats arise and a special election follows within 90 days. There is no Provisional entry stage.

→

§15.3 · DECLINE
Mandatory Devolution Review
First failure: warning and remediation. Second: renewed warning and revised plan. Third: certification to the Senate, which must affirmatively authorize Provisional status. The State remains a State; devolution still requires a referendum and agreement.

DEVOLUTION, MERGER & INDEPENDENCE — §15.4, §15.7, §15.9

Devolution §15.4

`60% vote · ≥50% turnout` → `2/3 Senate ratifies`

Once the devolution question reaches the voters, voluntary and mandatory-review routes use the same process: 60% vote with at least 50% participation, negotiation with the Legislature, then 2/3 Senate ratification. A completed devolution produces a Territory. Provisional-State referenda begin at the first sitting senator's term expiry and repeat every two years if unresolved.

Independence §15.9

`2/3 legislature` → `60% vote, 60% turnout` → `national approval required`

State approval starts the process: both federal chambers must then ratify by 2/3 within 90 days, with the petitioning State's members recused. A national vote follows within 180 days: 60% approval, 55% participation. A negotiated separation agreement needs 2/3 Senate ratification. The five-year bar applies to a failed Stage One vote (§15.9).

TERRITORIAL MERGER & STATE BOUNDARIES — §15.4, §15.7

A Territory or defined portion may merge with a geographically contiguous State: 60% of votes cast, ≥50% participation, the State's constitutional approval, a joint LM-JM integrity assessment, then Senate ratification by simple majority with quorum (§3.7). A defined-portion petition needs 5–15% of local eligible voters, set by statute, within at most 12 months. A certified referendum has a 30-day challenge window. State boundaries are fixed except under §15.4; a separating portion must become a Territory before seeking Statehood.

INDIGENOUS NATIONS — SOVEREIGNTY ACKNOWLEDGED, NOT GRANTED — §16.1–§16.5

Prior sovereignty, recognized
§16.1 · BILATERAL COMPACT

Indigenous sovereignty precedes the Republic. During the founding window, nations choose through their own lawful process. No election means interim Associated Community treatment, without implied consent to unaccepted Compact terms. Territorial Integration permanently ends the former status; a later sovereign relationship requires a new Compact. Predecessor treaties continue (§§16.1–16.5).

NUMBERS WORTH REMEMBERING

0 political admission votes to become a State — two successful audits decide (§15.2).

2 consecutive biennial audits with no material failure by any Monitor restore ordinary State status (§15.1.a).

3 consecutive overall failures send an existing State to the Senate, which may place it in Provisional status by absolute majority (§15.3).

60% devolution approval, with ≥50% turnout. Independence requires its separate State, federal-chamber, national-vote, and agreement stages (§15.9).

A theoretical constitutional design project — not the law of any existing nation.
